A knowledge and experience-sharing forum for agricultural risk management practitioners

The Forum for Agricultural Risk Management in Development (FARMD) is a network of practitioners seeking to enhance experience and knowledge sharing in ag-risk management. By improving the practice of ag-risk management, the network seeks to strengthen investments in the agricultural sector and reduce the vulnerabilities faced by different stakeholders.

FARMD is open to individuals and organizations working and interested in the agricultural risk management field, primarily in developing country contexts. Members of FARMD are highly diverse and cut across multilateral agencies, bilateral organizations, NGOs, private entities, regional organizations, agriculture supply chains, and government organizations, among others. Each member brings unique experiences, skills, and knowledge to the Forum with the intention of sharing and benefiting from the experiences, skills, and knowledge of other members.

To facilitate the achievement of its mission an online platform has been created providing a set of tools that allow practitioners to interact, exchange ideas, and discuss experiences, while gaining access to a repository of ag-risk resources.. The platform is comprised of three main sections: About FARMD, About Ag-Risk Management, and the AgRisk Community. The first two sections provide general information about agricultural risk management and the network, while the AgRisk Community, on the other hand, is a virtual space for interaction and experience sharing.

Support

The Swiss Government, through its State Secretariat for Economic Affairs \(SECO\), and the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs are the main donors supporting FARMD. The World Bank's Agricultural Risk Management Team plays a critical role in coordinating members' interactions and in the activities leading to the consolidation of the Forum.

Visit FARMD's online platform and take advantage of the dynamic tools offered to visitors and members!
